Handwritten text, likely bleed-through from the reverse side of the paper. The writing is in a cursive style and appears to be in a non-Latin script, possibly a form of Arabic or Persian. The text is arranged in several lines across the top portion of the page.

A second section of handwritten text in the same cursive script, continuing down the page. The lines are more widely spaced than the first section. The ink is dark and the paper shows signs of age and wear.
