The first thing I noticed when I stepped out of the plane was the humidity. It was like a warm blanket that had been pressed against my skin for hours. The air was thick and sticky, and I could feel it seeping into every pore. I had never experienced anything like this before.
 The humidity was a new kind of challenge, one that I had to learn to live with.
 It was a constant reminder that I was in a new environment, one that was very different from the one I had left behind. I had to adjust to the heat and the humidity, and I had to learn to breathe in the new air.
 It was a process that took time, but eventually, I found my way. I had to be patient and I had to be flexible. I had to be open to the new and the different. I had to be willing to embrace the unknown.
 And in the end, I found that the humidity was not so bad after all.
 It was just a part of the life I was living now.

I was not worried.

 worried.
